

The leading online career site and human resource service provider for agriculture, food, natural resources and biotechnology

AgCareers.com is dedicated to bringing together employers and job seekers through a targeted, online job board. With more than 4,600 new jobs each month from agriculture companies and those in related industries, it is easy to see why job seekers continue to use AgCareers.com as a top job search strategy.

We are not a traditional 'head hunter' -- Our simple, one time advertising fee is a much more economical resource than traditional recruiting methods.

Job seekers can use the site and its many services at no charge. They can browse through the jobs and apply directly to positions they find of interest as well as post their resume to the online database. This database continually has about 8,000 recently updated resumes at any given time.

We focus on attracting active job seekers as well as passive job seekers through our weekly e-newsletter, which is distributed to more than 180,000 people each week, participation in industry associations, media stories and paying particular attention to promoting diversity within our industry.

The variety of career types on AgCareers.com is also part of the appeal for our job seeker audience. We not only have the traditional agriculture jobs, such as Farm Managers and Production Managers, but we encourage our employers to post their non-traditional jobs, for example: Sales Representatives and Credit Analysts.

We service companies throughout North America in all sectors of the industry from our corporate office in Clinton, North Carolina, with additional staff and operations in Iowa, California and Ontario Canada. AgCareers.com continues to expand internationally and has an office in Australia to serve the Australian and New Zealand markets.

While the online job board remains AgCareers' main focus, we are also committed to providing continual education to our human resource clients and their employees. We accomplish this through educational workshops, conferences, company training, weekly e-newsletters and market research reports.
